There are many kinds of soundtracks for movies, the ones that have parts of the movie in it, some that are just the songs, some are mixed where it includes songs and parts of the movie, and some that are composed music just for that movie. All the different types soundtracks have one thing in common though, they tell the mood/moment of the scene they are played for. For the soundtrack "Whiplash", which is the name of the movie it's from, the music on it does all of what I mention above, has parts of the movie, are songs, mixed songs and movie, and is also composed just for the movie. However, there's a twist to this soundtrack, it's music for a movie about music and the musician trying to get better at playing the drums in jazz music.
