

Fin McBride (Peter Dinklage) finds his life takes an unexpected turn when his boss/best friend passes away. I want to go ahead and say that this is a low budget movie and you can tell; but it does not distract, hinder, or take away from the story. This movie has comedy, drama, and an insight on life. Olivia attempts to get over the lose of her child, Joe has a sick father, and Fin closes himself off from the world because he believes everyone is making fun of him for being born with dwarfism. Though they do not solve any of their problems they each find ways to cope better and lean on each other for support.
